Abstract

The viable success of the Marxist political grievance program will demand the attention of researchers for generations. How a small cabal of disaffected Marxist intellectuals were able to apply their praxis is of great interests. Not only that, they were able to hide their complicity in the destruction of the West by using the very institutions they sought to destroy. This paper will attempt to explain how Marxists were able to tap into a thick vein of resentment in the anti-society and use their grievances for political currency. As a testament to how successful they were, not only did they bury their tracks but also cement their power among the elites and their respective institutions. And now any attempt to extricate the Marxist artifacts from society is greeted with an allergic immuno-response by society. Thus, has the apex parasite of Marxism supplanted the host.
